

State Department of Education/Public Instruction COVID-19 Information/Guidance on School Closures and Reopening

As the current school year winds down and most school district buildings remain closed, the focus on graduation and promotion to the next grade is the current focus. Looking ahead, some states have started reopening based on phase-in criteria, while others, such as Hawaii and New York, have extended health mandates into summer.

As states reopen, reassessing the impact of COVID-19 while maintaining community safety and health is paramount. While some state departments of education and public instruction have published a proposed reopening framework, it's too early to tell which options will be selected at this time. In addition, when and how a district will reopen are largely determined by the local district and board of education authorities. The Center of Disease Control (CDC) released reopening guidance for schools and daycares. Other considerations include: state and local public health mandates, state COVID-19 data, and implementing safety measures to protect students, families, and school personnel.

- Status of school closure and openings for SY2019-20:
  - Forty-six (46) states and the District of Columbia have closed school campuses for the remainder of the school year. The remaining states have posted various school building closures dates – up until May 20.
  - Two states have released information on reopening of school campuses to finish the school year: Idaho's Board of Education is allowing schools to reopen if they meet certain safety protocols; and Montana Governor Bullock announced schools may reopen on May 7. He also recommended districts continue to work with local health authorities on decision making.
  - Wyoming's public health order was extended from May 15 to June 1. However, provisions were included in the executive order for reopening of schools as determined by school districts.
  - Tennessee Governor Bill Lee recommended schools remain closed until the end of the school year. He noted school closures are a district decision.
- Guidance is posted on state department of education, board of education, and/or local district websites:
  - Many states have received federal waivers for state testing assessments for reading, math and science, while some have waived current year requirements. The US Department of Education is considering broader authority for states.
  - State departments and/or board of educations have modified graduation requirements or have provided guidance/clarification on academic credit and awarding of graduation diplomas. In several states, they note discretion is at the district level. Flexibility is highly encouraged overall.
  - Grade point averages (GPA), class rank and other factors are determined by the district, including the weighting of grades for honors or advanced placement courses.
  - There have been no reports of districts unable to graduate seniors on-time, and districts have been creative in providing special recognition or ceremonies for graduating students.

Though the situation changes rapidly, we try our best to maintain the information and links. Please visit your state department of education and local school district websites for the most current information.
